Membership Benefits

Individual membership of the AHA includes the following benefits:

- Subscription to History Australia, a refereed journal with a reputation for cutting edge scholarship and a growing international profile, that publishes historical research and articles about the discipline and the profession of history. History Australia is published four times each year. It is available to members in an online version, but members can 'opt in' to receive print copies of the journal.
- Online access to History Australia archives with full text searching.
- Registration discounts for annual AHA conferences.
- Regular communication of employment opportunities.
- Regular receipt of the AHA newsletter with up-to-date information on scholarships, fellowships, workshops, specialist symposia, conferences and other events.
- Publicity concerning deadlines for CAL and NAA bursaries and the range of AHA biennial awards and prizes.
- Access to the AHA email network.
- Access to the postgraduate network and special postgraduate events at the annual conference.
- Representation of disciplinary concerns at the national level.

Affiliate Membership

The AHA welcomes affiliation by national scholarly historical societies which support the objectives and constitution of the AHA. Affiliates of the Australian Historical Association enjoy all the benefits of individual membership with the exception of the right to vote and stand for election. Members of affiliated organisations need to be individual members of the AHA to present at annual AHA conferences.

Additional benefits of affiliation include:

- Promotion of organisations through listing on the AHA website.
- Publicity of organisation's news and events through AHA social media channels.
- With the agreement of the conference organiser, access to the AHA annual conference as an affiliated special stream.
- Discounted conference registration cost for members of affiliated organisations.

Code of Ethics

The Australian Historical Association (AHA) is committed to integrity in the professional practice of history. In all its activities, the AHA is committed to inclusivity with regard to culture, class, ethnicity, faith, gender, gender expression and identity, sexual orientation, and physical abilities.

Discrimination, bullying and sexual harassment are unacceptable in the AHA and are unlawful under the following legislation:

- Sex Discrimination Act 1984 (Cth)
- Racial Discrimination Act 1975 (Cth)
- Disability Discrimination Act 1992 (Cth)
- Age Discrimination Act 2004 (Cth)
- Australian Human Rights Commission Act 1986 (Cth).

AHA Members found to have engaged in such conduct might be counselled, warned or disciplined as per the AHA Constitution. Severe or repeated breaches can lead to formal discipline up to and including exclusion.

The AHA Executive expects all members and participants to respect each other and to adhere to these principles of integrity, diversity and inclusion:

1. Members shall at all times maintain their professional integrity and shall not allow personal convictions or beliefs or pressure from any source including employers, funding bodies, and informants to lead to the concealment or manipulation of evidence.
2. Members shall be careful in any historical writing, teaching, public comment or testimony to indicate whether the statements made are an interpretation of facts or opinion or belief. Members shall avoid exaggerated or unwarranted statements.
3. Members shall not refuse any reasonable request to share their knowledge or expertise, and shall as far as possible make available the sources to which they have had access.
4. Members shall in published work or published statements about their research commit to being transparent by making due acknowledgement of the work of others and of ideas and methods originating in others, including research assistants, students, and Large Language Models (or AI-assisted tools). Members shall not claim as entirely their own, work to which they contributed only a part.
5. Members should respect the rights of oral history participants by acknowledging their contributions, or not, according to their informants' wishes.
6. Members shall respect the integrity of research materials and shall not damage or misappropriate materials whether publicly or privately owned.
7. Members shall make reasonable efforts to ensure the preservation of archival materials that appear to be at risk through neglect, threat of destruction, or any other cause. In this regard, members should encourage the gift, loan or copying of source material to be held in the appropriate public repository.
8. No member shall make false claims in a curriculum vitae, biographical notice, or the like. Members shall not invoke their professional standing or membership of the Association in support of statements in a field outside their area of expertise.
9. Members shall plan and complete research projects as carefully as possible and shall provide employers, funding bodies, and clients with prompt, accurate, and honest reports.

Australian Historical Association

10. Members shall not, without due permission, use any confidential information acquired during the course of their work for personal advantage or for the advantage of a co-worker or third person. Nor shall members use such information to the disadvantage of an employer/client nor disclose such information, except where such disclosure may be required by law.
11. Members shall apply strictly professional criteria to all matters of appointment, promotion and award without reference to culture, colour, sex, gender, sexual orientation, class, religion, family responsibilities, national origin, or beliefs.
12. Members shall not knowingly misrepresent the competence or integrity of another member of the profession.
13. Members shall take care to inform themselves of and to comply with all legal requirements relating to their work.
14. Members should at all times be courteous, respectful, and considerate to others, including in the form of verbal communication, email, and social media interaction (see below).
15. Members should, whenever appropriate, assist in the work and professional development of colleagues and students.

Social Media Policy

The AHA website and active social media profiles will contain a link to this Code of Ethics. The administrator/s of the AHA active social media profiles may exercise their discretion to block any member who breaches this Code of Ethics on the social media platforms of the AHA, and must confidentially report such cases to the Executive Committee.

Complaints

The policy and structure for addressing violations of the Code of Ethics will be clearly and prominently displayed on the AHA website.
Members should address their concerns to the AHA President via email or letter to: PO Box 1550 Macquarie Centre NSW 2113.
Members who would prefer to report their concerns anonymously should do so via talktospot.com/.
The Executive Officer will provide an annual report of complaints received (with no names used to identify the complainant or the subject of the complaint). The report will be circulated to the Executive and made available to members upon request.

AHA Conference Conduct

The AHA is committed to providing a welcome and inclusive conference environment for our members, collaborators, communities and friends. At AHA conferences, the AHA Executive expects participants and attendees to uphold the Association's Code of Ethics. Harassment or unacceptable behaviour will not be tolerated in any form or under any circumstance.
All participants in the annual Conference will be required to acknowledge the policy and their willingness to abide by it as part of the registration process.

I have read and agree to adhere to the AHA Code of Ethics.
